

MONDAYS

with Mike

Leadership comes in all sizes and stature

Today, we celebrate Presidents' Day with particular attention given to two of our country's most prolific leaders. This day originally honored George Washington, whose birthday falls on February 22. However, through the years, both George Washington and Abraham Lincoln (who was born on February 12) have come to be honored on the third Monday in February of each year.

Certainly, both men had tremendous stature and responsibility, managing our nation's growing pains in the eras that they served. However, leadership at its core is influence. Each had to influence those around them to pursue goals and objectives. For most of us, this type of influence would seem to come from older and more mature leaders, such as Washington and Lincoln.

Today, I want you to meet 10-year-old Lane as he readies his Mavericks for their football game. The energy and passion that you feel from him would have you and me ready to pursue that same goal. We would play for Lane!

Enjoy the link and the leadership message – never underestimate your ability to influence those around you toward a goal. Just believe in it with passion and articulate it with energy and conviction! People will play for you if you do!

Link: <https://bit.ly/10-Year-Old-Lane>

Have a great week!